The Suggestion Box and Digital Dogs launch controversial new site

SCOTTSDALE, AZ. April 5, 2005 - Digital Dogs, a Scottsdale-based Internet technology company, today announced the launch of a new Web site for client, The Suggestion Box, at <http://www.theanonymousemail.com>.

"Wouldn't you just love to tell somebody exactly what you're thinking without fear of being caught?" asked Howard Baer, owner of The Suggestion Box and creator of TheAnonymousEmail.com concept. "Having the chance to speak out without negative repercussions is a great stress reliever. And it's a lot cheaper than therapy."

With that goal in mind, Baer engaged Digital Dogs to design and develop the functionality behind TheAnonymousEmail.com, an online communication service for sending masked email messages.

As a therapeutic outlet, a desire to take action, or simply for fun, the site provides users with different graphical themes and more than 130 sample message ideas they might send to unsuspecting recipients. Total confidentiality of the sending party is guaranteed, and message recipients can even respond to anonymous emails — though they may never know the identity of their correspondent.

An annual subscription allows users access to a system where they can send an unlimited number of masked messages. The user agreement prohibits messages that are unlawful, harmful, abusive, harassing, disparaging, defamatory, vulgar, obscene, slanderous and libelous, among other listed violations, but encourages messages on complaints, love and romance, pranks and jokes, gossip, whistle-blowing, opinions, and constructive criticism.
